The spread of the Coronavirus has slowed in many European countries and the US appears to be peaking

The S&P 500 has already begun to rebound from the Coronavirus Pandemic

- The S&P 500 looks to have bottomed
- The recovery is greater than that of the 2018 sell off but not as large as the 2008 financial crisis (yet)
- We are 20% off that market peak
- There is potential for an upside move for the remainder of the year

FAANG stocks have led the rebound

Emerging Market FAANG stocks performance YTD

- The performance has been mixed
- It will take EM markets longer to recover from the sell off
- All the stocks have rebounded from their lows
- JD.com has been the leader

How cheap are they?

The Facebook logo, consisting of the word "facebook" in white lowercase letters on a dark blue rectangular background.The Google logo, featuring the word "Google" in its multi-colored font.The Amazon.com logo, featuring the word "amazon.com" in black lowercase letters with a curved orange arrow underneath.The Netflix logo, featuring the word "NETFLIX" in red uppercase letters.

How Cheap Are They?

1. Facebook FB is trading with a forward P/E of just 17.8. That's where it was trading at its 2018 lows when shares sold off due to the privacy and regulatory issues. Its P/S ratio of 6.7 is also equivalent to the 2018 lows. When Facebook went IPO in 2012, its forward P/E of 72. If you missed the 2018 buying opportunity, 2020 might be another chance.
2. Alphabet GOOGL has a forward P/E of 21.1. This is the cheapest the search engine giant has been since 2012, when it traded at 15.4x. Its P/S ratio of 4.9 is also the lowest since 2012. Is Alphabet a buy?
3. Apple AAPL was trading at its highest valuation of the last decade just as the coronavirus hit, with a forward P/E of 22.5. Shares have fallen over 13% year-to-date and it now trades with a forward P/E of 18.9. It's got the cash to survive any global economic shock, but are its shares still too expensive even with the pullback?
4. Amazon AMZN is one of the few FAANG stocks that is actually UP for the year, gaining about 7% year-to-date. With its Whole Foods grocery business and excellent delivery logistics, Wall Street is betting on it to be a big winner during and after the pandemic. But with a forward P/E of 71, is it still too expensive?
5. Netflix NFLX used to have the highest P/E ratio of the FAANGs. In 2019, it traded between 82 and 111x earnings. But even with the shares UP year-to-date, the forward P/E ratio has dropped to just 60.5. That's its lowest P/E since 2011, when it traded at 15x. Is this a buying opportunity as everyone is stuck inside with nothing to do except watch the streaming services?

The Dividend Yield on the S&P is attractive

- The Dividend yield on the S&P 500 is higher than the 10-year US Treasury

S&P 500 Dividend Yield

Oil prices remain under pressure

- The price drop when viewed by the 3 month contract is not as bad as the headlines
- A drop in oil prices is good for the economy

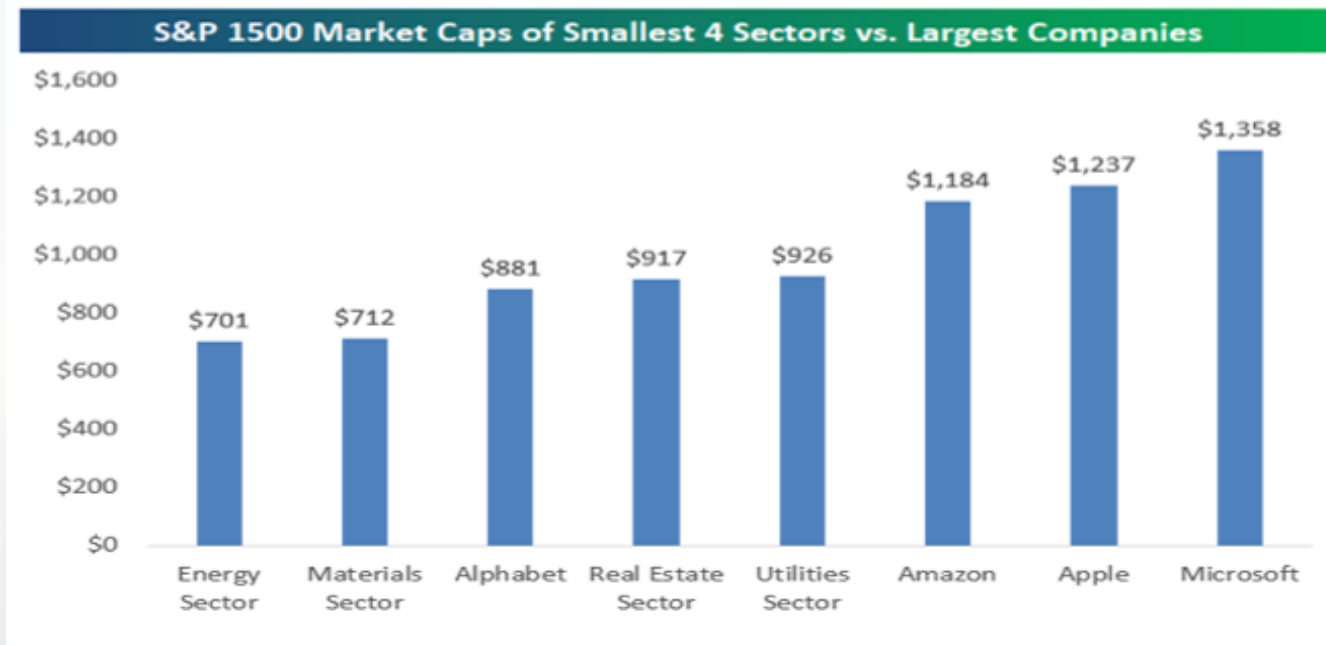

Do we have more horrors ahead? We might well, but the evidence is that they haven't yet been priced in. Normally the futures for the first and sixth month trade in close alignment, as the following chart shows. They parted company a month ago. The odds are that the industry will be able to reorganize itself over the next few months to avoid the absurdity of needing to pay others to take oil in nonexistent storage. But getting to that point will be difficult.

The oil sector no longer has the impact it once did

- The oil sector only has a 5% weighting of the S&P 500
- The Energy sector market cap is approximately half that of Apple and Microsoft
- In the US energy stocks no longer have the impact on the market they once did

To put this into glorious perspective, Bespoke Investment Group offers the following chart comparing the current market capitalizations of the four biggest stocks in the S&P 500 (Microsoft Corp., Apple Inc., Amazon.com Inc. and Google parent Alphabet Inc.) with the four smallest sectors. At this point, the entire market value of all the energy and materials companies in the S&P 500 is barely any bigger than Microsoft. All the big four internet stocks are at present bigger, in their own right, than the entire S&P 500 energy sector.

Recap
