Manager's Comment

Rising Treasury yields, weak economic data out of China and weak trading volumes all contributed to a tough August for the US equity market. The three major stock indexes wrapped up a volatile month with the large-cap S&P 500 index suffering its first monthly loss since February, while the Nasdaq Composite logged its first down month of the year. The powerful artificial intelligence-led rally that helped drive US equity prices for most of the year took a breather in August. Only two of the eleven S&P 500 sectors posted a positive return in the month. The yield on the 10-year Treasury note neared a 16-year high in August before rolling over late in the month. The dollar rose around 1% in August on the back of the spike in yields, gold fell by more than 2% and oil ended the month higher.

In August, the Castlestone FAANG+ UCITS fund posted its first negative month of performance since April. The drop in Chinese stock prices was partly responsible for the weak monthly performance. JD.com was removed from the fund in August and replaced with Infosys Ltd. Adding Infosys helped keep our international diversification while the removal of JD lowered our Chinese exposure. We also replaced PayPal with Arista Networks. While we continue to like the payment processing sector, we felt an increase in our exposure to the AI sector was warranted. FAANG+'s top stock in August was Akamai Technologies. Our top holdings remain Amazon.com, Alphabet Inc, Apple Inc, Meta Platforms and Netflix.
